Yet there was a deep ambivalence surrounding the figure of the Tudor witch, for even occult powers had their uses. A Christian-Cabalist, Dr John Dee suggested the date for Elizabeth I's coronation and enjoyed her patronage as court astrologer most of his life, despite openly conjuring 'spirits' from the 'super-celestial sphere' using rituals found in ancient magical grimoires.

In the Tudor and Stuart time witchcraft was a very big issue, it was associated with death and pain, no one thought witches were good. Witches would be tried and punished, often the people would be accused maybe because every one hated them. Now we would think if they were a witch, they would use magic to get themselves out of this situation.
